ECDS creates tour app of campus public art

Missing the Emory campus? Now you can take an online tour of the Emory campus public art pieces, courtesy of the OpenTour Builder app created by the Emory Center for Digital Scholarship (ECDS). The tour, accompanied by a locator map, spotlights 17 sculptures around campus and the stories behind them.

One to watch: African American women as caretakers

As we close out Women’s History Month, we recommend viewing “Framing Shadows: Portraits of African American Nannies.” In this video, African American Studies associate professor Kimberly Wallace-Sanders, who curated the “Framing Shadows” exhibit at the Woodruff Library last year, talks about the history of these overlooked women from their point of view.

Emory Libraries COVID-19 update

The Emory Libraries have been working with Emory University to practice social distancing guidelines while continuing to assist faculty and students with the move to remote teaching and learning. All Emory Libraries are closed until further notice, and all spring semester events have been canceled. However, our online resources remain available. Find out more at the link below.

Emory hardship funds: Help out in the fight

The COVID-19 crisis can make us feel helpless. If you’re willing and able to help, consider donating to the Emory hardship funds. There are four funds to choose from: Emory Together, to help students, faculty and staff experiencing hardship; Feed the Frontline, to provide meals for healthcare workers in Emory’s Atlanta-area hospitals; Emory COVID-19 Impact, for patient healthcare and research needs in the Emory Healthcare system; and Emory Healthcare Employee Hardship, to assist healthcare workers.

One to watch: African American women as caretakers

As we close out Women’s History Month, we recommend viewing “Framing Shadows: Portraits of African American Nannies.” In this video, African American Studies associate professor Kimberly Wallace-Sanders, who curated the “Framing Shadows” exhibit at the Woodruff Library last year, talks about the history of these overlooked women from their point of view.