Emory Libraries statement on systemic racism

The Emory Libraries are committed to exposing and addressing all forms of injustice through the implementation of solid actions and strategies to cultivate an anti-racist environment and abolish systemic racism. Read Dean and University Librarian Yolanda Cooper's statement at the link below.

Libraries reopen by appointment for Emory faculty and grad students

Some of the Emory Libraries are now open by appointment only to Emory faculty and graduate students who need to use in-person services and get research help.

Intertwining paths: The papers of Tracy K. Smith and Kevin Young

Poets and friends Tracy K. Smith and Kevin Young met as Harvard undergraduates, became part of the Dark Room Collective, and journeyed from rising talents to established poets. Now their papers have found the same home at the Rose Library.

Graduate fellows complete projects despite pandemic

These graduate students didn’t let a pandemic get in the way of capping off their Woodruff fellowships with great work.
