In the freezers, raw meat was above ready-to-eat foods such as dumplings and cooked meat. Likewise, raw chicken was above eggs, and unwashed vegetables were above washed vegetables in the cooler.
Among other violations, the Soudie sausage was not reheated within a safe time frame and was discarded.
The slicer and grinder had excess accumulation of debris.

Emory Hillandale a Level I trauma center, a designation meaning it's equipped to care for the "most urgent victims of violence, car crashes and brain trauma. When AMC closes, Grady will be the Atlanta area's only such facility.
Officials hope, however, that the expansion of 100-bed Hillandale could reduce the flow of non-Level 1 patients to Grady.
"This is the reality that we face, and consequently we have to go forward," Thurmond said. "Wellstar is not going to retract its decision."

Under DeKalb's proposal, the $12 million allotment for that hospital would be distributed as follows:
■ $4.7 million to expand the emergency room by up to 15 "bays."
■ $4.5 million to renovate the hospital's second-floor intensive care unit.
■ $1.7 million to replace the hospital's CT scanner.
■ $1.1 million create a new Hillandale Trauma Recovery Center, a "hospital-based violence prevention program that will employ 10 specialists, including psychologists, outreach workers and behavioral health specialists, devoted to violence prevention and trauma recovery."
■ A $250,000 grant to a non-profit "that will inform and encourage eligible uninsured residents to register for American Affordable Care Act, Medicaid and other subsidized insurance coverages."

Emory Healthcare interim CEO and president Dane Peterson and other representatives from the hospital system attended the virtual county commission meeting where Thurmond announced the proposal. They expressed support for the idea.
"Hillandale has outgrown its capacity," Dr. Bryce Gartland, Emory's hospital group president, said.
DeKalb, meanwhile, already sends millions to Grady every year. This year's regular contribution is scheduled to be $22.2 million. The additional $8 million proposed on Tuesday would help address the hospital's operating deficit, which was driven up by the high cost of using contract nurses during the pandemic.
State officials have pledged $130 million to help Grady expand its operations in the wake of AMC's closure, but that work is likely to take at least two years.

Thurmond is hopeful an expansion at Emory Hillandale could provide shorter-term relief, though a specific time frame was not available. Gartland said that, if approved, work to expand the emergency department in particular would begin as soon as possible.
"I think we'll strengthen the entire health care safety net in metro Atlanta," Thurmond said. "Particularly in the east metro."

As proposed, the $8 million for Grady would come from the county's share of federal American Rescue Plan Act funds. The Emory Hillandale expenditures would include about $3 million from ARPA and the rest from the county's general fund reserves.
The three-member committee of county commissioners providing initial consideration of the proposals met Tuesday afternoon. Commissioner Jeff Rader raised questions about spending the money without more information. He called the expenditures for capital improvements at Hillandale "a pig in a poke."
Thurmond defended Emory by saying he had solicited the proposal, not the other way around.
Rader then proposed using ARPA funds for the whole allotment rather than pulling from the county's reserves. Committee chairman Larry Johnson initially seemed intrigued by the idea but nobody seconded Rader's substitute motion.
The items ultimately passed out of committee as proposed, with Rader abstaining.
They could come before the full board for a final vote next week.
"We're in the situation now where it will affect people's lives," Commissioner Merceda Davis Johnson said. "And so we must step up to the plate."
